"Where is your certificate of election?" asked Captain John S. Wise of Hon. Car-ter Glass, in Reuger's, the other night after the court had decided the Constitutional case. "Here it is, in my inside pocket," replied Mr. Glass. "Let me see it," Captain Wise requested, jokingly. "I am afraid you would run away with it," was the quick reply of the bright little Sixth District Congressman. "Now, Glass," continued Captain Wise, "don't you think the plea of Hayes for his race in court to-day was an eloquent and pathetic one?" "Certainly I do," replied Mr. Glass. "I think Hayes made the speech on your side, and ought to have the fee."

That is about all you were ever willing for a negro to have in Virginia," observed Captain Wise. "And now you want to take that from him," was the rejoinder of Mr. Glass, and the two bright Virginians passed, good friends, from the hostelry, one to catch a train for his type home and the other. for his Lynchburg home, and the other for Washington, to renew his fight on the Constitution.
